This course explores the diverse experiences of U.S. women of color in their struggles for social justice and human dignity in the face of gender, sexual, racial, ethnic, and class oppression in the twentieth century. The class pays special attention to the social movements of the 1960s and 1970s and the intersections among those efforts led by and composed of African American, Chicana/Latina, Native American, and Asian American, transgender and queer women.